I would like to have my name announced as follows (please print and provide phonetic instruction where you think necessary):

_____

At the ceremony, we would like to call you to the front of the room, introduce you by name, and present you with a Certificate of Recognition. But in contrast to the College Convocation, which tends to be large and impersonal, we would also like to take the time to say a few words about you, your experiences, your accomplishments, your fondest memories, and your plans and aspirations. This is not just a matter of tradition in the Department. By personalizing the occasion for you, the graduating student, we also much enrich the occasion for your family, friends, and associates who are in attendance, after all, because they care about you. It's you they came to see and hear about. It's your pride of accomplishment they came to share. You can help us in this regard by giving some thought to the answering of each of the following eight questions. Please don't be modest.

1. What experiences, activities, or honors at Arizona State University were particularly meaningful or valuable to you?

2. Looking back over your time at ASU, of what accomplishments are you most proudest? This might be something like your winning of some award or honor or your achievement of some particular goal. But it might also involve something less spectacular – but no less important – like your overcoming some hardship, sustaining a family, or working long hours while advancing toward your degree.

3. What do you think your most long-lasting memory of ASU Political Science will be?

4. What Political Science faculty are likely to stand out in your memories, and why?

5. Are there any people (e.g. parents, spouses, friends, professor) who have been particularly helpful to and supportive of your undergraduate career and to whom you'd like to express special thanks?

6. What are your plans for the near-term future (i.e. the next few months)?

7. What are you long-range educational and/or career goals?

8. Are there any special circumstances we would need to be aware of or assistance we would need to provide you or your guests at the ceremony?
