ARIZONA STATE UNIVERSITY STUDENTS, FACULTY, AND STAFF GATHER AT AMERICAN HUMANICS MANAGEMENT INSTITUTE

Washington, DC. –

Arizona State University students, faculty and staff participated in the 2007 American Humanics Management Institute (AHMI), a nonprofit management educational symposium, January 3-6, in Washington, DC. Arizona State University was well represented by Campus Executive Director, Robert Ashcraft, Program Assistant Stacey Vicario, and the following student participants: Korbi Adams, Matt Besenfelder, Aydaly Briones, Megan Cremer, Jessica Gardner, Caitlin Gizler, Mallory Holguin, Kimberley Krueger, Erika Levin, Lakshmi Madhavpeddi, Sean Mckenzie, Jeremy Meiske, Michelle Meyers, Rema Nasaredden, Daniel Nunez, Jamie Patton, Stacy Perrault, Megan Pfeleger, Ellena Phillips, James Quinn, Nicole Ritz, Sarah Short, Ryan Tang, Shannon Wagner, Adorian Walker, Casey Walker, Jonathan Yee, Laura Zilverberg, and Margaret Zywczyk.

Caitlin Gizler served as the AHMI 2006 Student Representative.

Dr. Anne Schneider, Professor, Arizona State University, serves on the American Humanics National Board of Directors.

More than 580 American Humanics students and faculty, as well as more than 300 nonprofit and corporate leaders, took part in this unique opportunity to network, participate in simulated case studies and a national collegiate dialogue, and attend workshops led by local and national experts in nonprofit management.

The purpose of the annual Management Institute is to expose junior and senior students to experiences they will encounter as youth and human service agency professionals. This unique educational symposium is considered the capstone professional development experience for students enrolled in the American Humanics nonprofit management program. It is held annually during the first week in January and rotates to a different city each year.

Keynote speakers included David Eisner, CEO, the Corporation for National and Community Service; Diana Aviv, President and CEO, Independent Sector; and Ralph Smith, Executive Vice President, the Annie E. Casey Foundation.
