1998-99 TRANSFER GUIDE

FOR EASTERN ARIZONA COLLEGE

Bachelor of Science

Justice Studies

The Arizona resident applicant for transfer admission must meet competency requirements and have a cumulative grade point average (GPA) of 2.00 on a four-point (A) scale in all college level work and be in good standing and eligible to return to the last institution attended. Students who have less than 24 semester transfer credits must also meet competency requirements. Arizona residents who have completed an Arizona General Education Curriculum (AGEC) or an associate degree with a minimum 2.00 GPA in the AGEC or associate degree are exempt from admission requirements. A maximum of 64 semester credit hours will be accepted when transferred from community colleges; all transferable community college credits are accepted as lower-division credits and do not satisfy upper-division General Studies or graduation requirements.

Students pursuing the Bachelor of Science in Justice Studies will find an interdisciplinary classroom experience emphasizing ideas from the social sciences, philosophy, and legal studies. The degree is designed for students interested in studying justice issues and those desiring justice-related careers, including law. Students will develop an understanding of meanings of justice and injustice and analyze often controversial issues through critical inquiry and social science investigation. Faculty place primary focus on theories of justice and injustice. Students accordingly learn about crime and violence, adolescents and delinquency, and differential institutional and socio-economic treatment of populations based on gender, race, class and ethnic identities, including American Indian peoples.

The heart of any university program is its faculty. The School of Justice Studies boasts a faculty with strong scholarly credentials. They include national and local award recipients in research, teaching, and community and professional service. Faculty are committed to challenging students to develop their own understanding of justice, to analyze critically and to propose possible solutions to a wide variety of contemporary issues of justice facing society. While on the journey through the Justice Studies curriculum, students will encounter opportunities to develop transferable skills including critical thinking, oral and written discourse, computer literacy, team building and problem solving. Faculty encourage students to “practice justice” through various experiential approaches including volunteer work, service learning and internships. Students will actively engage in their education via discussion, cooperative learning, field trips, and case-based classroom formats. For more information, call or write:
