

Basis of Discipline.

Self-government, guided by a strict regard for the rights of others, and a delicate appreciation of the proprieties of one's environment, is the only kind of government capable of developing and fostering the conduct and character requisite to make the successful teacher.

It is the purpose of the faculty, to inculcate correct ideas of conduct, to stimulate a healthy sentiment in regard to it, and to make the students self-respectful, self-helpful, self-reliant and self-governing. All students whose best endeavors are not in harmony with this purpose are dismissed from the school.

The student's sense of honor is relied upon, as an important element in the government of the school.
